Prajñāpāramitā
प्रज्ञापारमिता
(A short note on Prajnaparamita)

If there is any religion that would cope with Modern scientific needs it would be Buddhism.

The literal translation of the Sanskrit word Prajnaparamita signifies "the Perfection of Transcendent Wisdom (Perfect wisdom beyond ordinary limits / Prajna- प्रज्ञा wisdom and paramita पारमिता perfect or perfection). Prajnaparamita is a central concept in Mahayana Buddhism and its practice is believed to be the essential element of the Bodhisattva Path. The practice of Prajnaparamita is described in the Prajnaparamita Sutras, which vary widely in length and are written by different scholars. Tara and Prajnaparamita are both referred to as the mother of all Buddha since Buddha is born from wisdom. The Dharma is classified as inferior and superior according to the disciple's grade. In Buddhism the disciples are classified into four different stages of human beings for example ordinary men, the stage of sainthood, Saint and bodhisattvas. In Buddhism, Dharma refers to the teachings of Buddha, the Four Noble Truths, the Eightfold Noble Path, and other guidelines. The main motif is to achieve freedom and liberation from suffering and understand the state of mind to realize the supreme happiness, the natural joy, and nirvana. The happiness is classified as Ananda (Joy), Paramanda (Supreme Joy), Virmananda (Absence of Joy), and Sahajanand. (Natural Joy).

The Four Noble Truths (Sanskrit: catvari aryasatyani)

The Four Noble Truths are an important principle in Buddhism, classically taught by the Buddha in the Dharmacakra Pravartana Sutra. The four Noble Truths refer to the state of mind Dukkha (Suffering), Samudaya (the cause of suffering), Nirodha (free from suffering), Marga (away to end suffering).
